The wine list is broken into two major categories, new world and old world. Wines from North America, South America, Australia, and New Zealand are considered new world. These wines are mostly labeled by the grape varietals and tend to express riper fruit due to the warmer climate of these regions

Wines from Europe are considered old world. These wines are labeled mostly by the region that the grapes are grown. The term is used to describe general differences in viticulture and winemaking philosophies. Old world regions emphasize the tradition and the role of terroir versus the new world where the grape varietal and the winemaker are key components.

The list is always growing and changing and the majority of the wines I've selected for the list you may not be familiar with; please don't hesitate to ask if you need assistance choosing a bottle. If you prefer put it completely in my hands, wine pairings are available.
